THE relations existing between Caina and her great Northern neighbour have attracted attention in the home papers. The recent change of policy on the part of the Ameer of Kashgar has already been noticed, as well as the results to which it led. The Russian Lord of the felse, with breach of Section 243 of on the subject, says that this act means who said he was very surry, was sentenced to nothing less than the effective support of ten weeks hard lubeur."

This is only too likely. Russia never renders and tied the score, after which the game they are forther pleased that Mr. Sunje and tan in which the former was requested to a service without good prospect of reward; continued to be severely contested until 13 other officials have appeared emong them. But there are many sides to most questions, and this particular one is no exception to the rule. over the Chinese army, march to Peking, and drive the Manchus from power. The establishment of a Mahomedan monarch on the Diagon Throne especially a vigorous ruler like YACOOR BEG-would not chime in with Muscovite ideas and intentions at all.

It would mean a serious check to Russian policy, in Asia, and as such would no donot meet with strenuous opposition from St. Petersburg. In the second place it is a column, the Eastern Extension Telegraph Come matter of notoriety that the recent acquisitions made by Russia in Central Asia have tween Penang and Rangoon by means of the cost an enormous sum of money, and that steam yacht Pantie. Tai Afat and Lo Lun from its exhaustion. If by serving China at | Cheong, in which Mr. Holmes appeared for the this juncture, therefore, she can, without interfering with her own pet plans, also obtain some important trading privileges, she would not be loth to do it. Supposing Kashgar crushed by China, and compelled to acknowledge her rule, what would Russia lose? Simply nothing. At any time that suited her, she could once more stir up the people to revolt, and give them her protection, the price being simply a change of government, which they no doubt, would be glad enough to pay. will-be-scen, therefore, that-if-Russia_chooses_ to allow Kashgar to be once prore brought under the sway of His Celestial Majesty, i will be because she knows that she will lose little and may gain much. It would, at most. mean only a delay in the fulfilment of her designs. And she can afford to wait; more than that, she knows how to wait, better perhaps the I dier " to the want of an American Consul than any other Power. At this moment, too, the condition of the other and original Sick Man-Turkey-occupies her deepestand most absorbing attention. Her best laid schemes with regard to the complicated Eastern Question threaten to "gang agley," and with suppressed fury she is watching the progress of the game in which she has been more than once checkmated. A crisis seems to be lapproaching, and whenever it comes she will need all her onorgies, and her resources will have to be strained to the utmost for the struggle. This is one more good reason why she should for a while remain quiescent in Asia. Meanwhile it will be well for China to put no faith in Russian protestations of friendship and support. It may serve the latter's turn now to profess unending cordiality and good faith, but a reference to her past policy is sufficient to dissipate any belief in her sincerity. More than a hundred and fifty years ago China had reason to complain of Russian aggression, and had to destroy the forts crected by the Siberian Authorities BANGROE Messrs. Malherbe, Jullien & Co. on the Chinese frontier in defiance of agree ment and in open violation of international law. The same policy has been followed unswervingly by Russian diplomatists ever sinco. and little by little they have wrested a large strip of territory from Coina, which they no doubt ultimately intend to increase. It would be a wild idea indeed to found any hopes of a future firm alliance between the two Empires on the fact that Russia has for him under the eye, because he was preventing some occult reason, satisfactory to herself no doubt, supplied the Chinese army against Kashgar with corn. It is unlikely that it was a purely commercial transaction, for hard labour for steahing fruit from trees at the Russia, as before intimated, cover loses the chance of improving an occasion to her own advantage. But Bakunine tried to connect the Saxon and the Bohemian movement, and lived for a time in concealment at Dresden in order to better promore this object. But the Dresden revolution of united Germany against the Beust and Rabeaborst Ministry could not stir up the Ozechs. the enemies of Germany, and Bakunine's speculation on a revival of the popular movement was of no influence with them. He, however, was one of the most energetic leaders of the Dresden movement, and held out to the last, when he fled with Henbuer, the chief of the provisional Government, to Obemnitz. There both were betrayed to the authorities by a former associate, taken back to Konigstein tried, and condemned to be shot. When asked whether they would implore the King for mercy. Bakanine answered he preferred to be shot. The King Friedrich pardoned him nevertheless, and afterwards rejuctantly consented that he should be taken to Austria for the sake of the investigation of the Prague affair only, and then given up to Sax my again. The Austrians did not succeed in getting out of Bakunine the expected information, but became so angly with the prisoner that they disregarded their promise to the Saxon Government and delivered him up to Hussia. When Bakunine arrived at St. Petersburg, Cz ir Nicolas bad him brought into his presence, and from the conversation he had with him he felt convinced that Bakunine was an intelligent but a most dangerous man. He therefore kept him in prison at Schlüselburg, on the Lake o Ladoga, although Bikunine was under no se cusation of any crime against Russia at that time. When Micolas died, the present Emperor at first refused Bakunine's mother any change in the fate of berson; but was afterwards in duced to have him sent to Siberia, where he was allowed even to marry a lady who possessed a small estate. But such life did not satisfy our friend; he longed for the emotions o oivilized life and participation in the solution of its problems. He consequently persuaduse the money for their liberation. Having procured a commission as a mercantile traveller. he went to the river Amoor, where he found : Government frigate just preparing to go down the river. He called upon the captain, showed suspected; on the contrary, the captain was delighted with the amiable and well-informed merchant he had on board, and when they had to part company he even helped him to another ship—an American clipper, bound to Japan and Culifornia. Bakunine had learned from his friend the captain that at any hour

the Governor—to whom our mercantile traveller was personally known-might come up the river and step on board the frigate; be was, therefore, very glad when he found himself on his way down the river Amoor in the American clipper, and could slip down to the oabin when his Excellency the Governor passed the little graft. He reached San Franpieco enfely, where his arrival made a sensation. Several friends from Germany were found in the town of the gold-diggers, and helped him on to New York, where his friend Alexander Herzen paid the passage to Loudon for him. From Herzen I learned Bikunine's arrival come back from the other side of the grave, and I hastened to London to see him and to shake him by the band. This was in 1860. "You are the same," he said, when he saw ma: "but I must have chunged terribly," 'Yes, indeed," I replied. "You have grown atout; your face, your voice, everything is changed." "But not my ideas, nor my disposition," he replied, and lit up one of his oigarettes. "These are my friends from the Conigetein." . He then told me his story. But as to bis ideas, he had also undergone a considerable change. He was very hostile to the German, and a Communist sans phrase. Extracts. AN AFTERTHOUGHT.

- (REPRINTED PROM THE LIPBARY EDITION OF I ALPRED TENNION'S WORRE.) Ah, God, the petty fools of rhyme," That shrick and sweat in pigmy wars,
- Before the stony fore of Time. And looked at by the allens stars That hate each other for a song, And do their little best to bite and pinch their brothers in the throng,
- And scretch the very dead for spite. And strive to make an inch of room For their small selves, and cannot hear The sullen Lethe rolling doom On thom and theirs and all things here.
- When one small touch of charity. Could lift them nearer godlike state Than if the crowded orb should ory, Like those that cried Diena great And I, too, talk and miss the touch I talk of. Surely, after all, The noblest answer unto such Is perfect stillness when they brawl.
- A VISIT TO NIKKO, JAPAN
